The movie opens with a black-and-white view of the country's capital, New Delhi, with a view over the Ganges, now referred to by some as the 'rivers of blood'. But soon, a boat with two men from different towns comes down on the river. The man in it is Rishabh Chawla, the son of a famous politician. The public mood has been shifting to the opposition. Timane's biggest city and the main base of the Congolese army had been the epicenter of an ethnic civil war since the first civil unrest on June 11 that saw about 6,000 people killed. Civil activists say that warlords control the capital through criminal alliances, and with Mr. Kabila's approval rating at only 24 per cent, there is little hope that his reforms will change the situation anytime soon.. Timane has seen no significant change during the first two months of Mr. Kabila's presidency, as he continues to lead the military and the opposition in his war against an estimated half a million Zulu protesters who have been locked in bloody confrontations with police in many cities across the country.
